

Roundtable: Addressing Barriers to Evidence-Based Practices

The gap between social science and public policy/practice is an important barrier to constructive social discourse seeking to provide holistic support for children and families. This roundtable discussion aims to bring together researchers and practitioners in an effort to identify the social, structural, and institutional barriers to implementing evidence-based practices, while providing space for open discussion on ways to overcome those barriers. Finally, this round-table will highlight the importance of research partnerships for the advancement of societal, communal, and familial justice.
